Sin not only distorts our identity as children of God but also alienates us from our vocation as kingly priests of creation. Through our sharing in Christ's baptism, we are restored to our identity in our creaturely vocation.

The Spirit of Baptism: Sharing Christ's Identity and Vocation

"Christ must be definitely accepted as our sanctification; if we wish to make any progress in holiness, we have to give up belief in the value of self-effort in holiness. The gift of holiness must be worked out in our daily life, but we work from holiness, not to holiness. To become holy we must possess the holy one.

175 which Lampe sees, however,
between the emphasis on sanctification
and a post-con-version experience of the Spirit is sound. This two-stage view of baptism is implicit in Irenaeus⁸ (ca. 185)
and is made explicit in Tertullian (ca.
160-222) who composed the first
treatise ever written on baptism.'
