A relatively small corpus is sufficient to generate a list of the 2,000 most frequent English words, or the list of 3,000 words or 5,000 words because such words appear frequently enough in any text. However, an enormous text database (corpus) is required to ensure reliable word frequency information even for rare and infrequently used words.

Great lists. Thank you.
One British word that really threw me: tip. In the U.K., one meaning of a tip is a dump in American English. I and a bunch of other students were confused when our teacher (from England) walked into the classroom and said, "This room is a tip!" After a back and forth, we found out that she wanted us to tidy up
